The technique in Patent Document 1 uses a non-conventional tapered mold and a bending mold and can mold a tire with an asymmetric tread pattern. In the technique in Patent Document 1, it is assumed that the tire has a generally symmetric shape. Further, it is also assumed that the tires are in a state before a first tire is molded in which an outer circumferential side of the tire is supported by a tread and an inner circumferential side is supported by a crown. The tread pattern of the conventional tire is formed with a shape of a generally symmetric curved surface, and the bending and molding process are performed to mold the tire based on the generally symmetric shape. Therefore, the tread pattern of the tire in Patent Document 1 is formed with a generally symmetric curved surface of a tapered shape, and the curvature radius of the curve becomes larger as the position moves from the circumferential center toward the outer circumferential side of the tire. The tapered mold disclosed in Patent Document 1 has a shape in which the left and right halves are configured with a wide section and a narrow section, and a convex part is formed on the wide section. This means that the specific shape is applied by forming a tread pattern for a tire with a wide section and a narrow section, and further making the wide section more larger and the narrow section less larger as the position moves from the circumferential center toward the outer circumferential side of the tire. In the technique disclosed in Patent Document 1, a shape that connects the two curved surfaces with a one-way connection at a curved line surface is used for the first tire, and in a first molding cycle, a semicircle-like section and a concave section are formed from one curved surface, and in a second molding cycle, a convex section is formed from the other curved surface, and the curved surface is molded with one

When Power goes out of your home, there is more than likely going to be no electricity for a long time. Let's just imagine if the grid goes down and all your electronic devices don't work. Would you be able to get through a long blackout? Would you know how to operate the world around you? Well, in the event of an extreme situation like this, this vlog introduces a couple of survival techniques that a blackout may seem like to you. If you happen to be in an extreme blackout situation, and you need to take immediate action, then you will need something to light up your environment. You will also need a way to connect with other people if you get stuck somewhere and require assistance. In this episode, you will learn how to create your own blackout flashlight. I like to call this blackout flashlight "Power Popper" because it reminds me of the Popper flashlight made in the 1950's. To connect with other people during a blackout, then you can create your own radio. This blackout radio will actually be an amplifier, like a speaker, for a radio. It will be necessary to get in touch with other people to find out whether or not there is any emergency situation. Dangers in a power outage In a blackout, there is a lot of unpredictability in the situation. You will need to be aware of what is happening around you. You will also need to make sure that you are aware of any hazards that may exist. Fires Fires can happen in the event of a blackout. During a blackout, there is a huge chance that there will be an increase in the amount of human error. This means that there is a possibility of a fire breaking out anywhere in the house.
